Reddaway Relocates Stockton Terminal

TUALATIN, Ore., Feb. 27, 2015 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- (Nasdaq:YRCW) - Reddaway, the less-than-truckload next-day transportation leader in the western U.S. and Canada, announced that it has relocated its Stockton, CA terminal to better meet the needs of its customers.

The new Reddaway terminal is more spacious with over twice the yard space and 47% more dock space as well as a more modern office environment. With 50 doors and a 100-foot wide dock, there is ample room for business operations. Additional benefits include a more customer- and employee-friendly location, cost savings to the organization and easy access to and from the I-5 corridor.

"Our new Stockton facility will provide us room to operate more efficiently and further improve services to our customers. This larger, more flexible and modern work environment will accommodate future growth and is ideal for our needs," said T.J. O'Connor, CEO and president of Reddaway. "The new terminal will help us continue to evolve and keep pace with our customer's needs, allowing us to provide exceptional value and superior service along the way. The proximity to the I-5 Interstate is an added benefit to customers and employees."
